

MY SWEETHEART LIZZIE: ALL IN THE FAMILY

Through the kindness of Peter Dilg of Baldwin, N. Y., we were able to obtain a charming postcard of an early phonograph and record store. Although it is clearly dominated by Victor products, an Edison Home Phonograph is also visible with a wooden morning glory horn on the right. It sits atop a door-type cylinder record cabinet. A sign on the left states that "The most popular stars of vaudeville make records for the Victor." And under a high-power lens, a sign for Columbia Records appears through the sunny window. And the date? The postmark on the other side has April 20, 1910, mailed at Greenport, N. Y. However, the calendar on the wall shows March 1910. The brief inscription on the reverse proclaims "My ... sweetheart Lizzie." Lucky girl!

On page 2, a different Victor store of 1925 reveals no more horn phonographs, but Nipper is still there (what's that around his neck?). But the radio on the right tells the tale. Which store would you want to visit?

DEAR APM:

Question: A Standard X outside horn disc talking machine I have bears some resemblance to Columbia machines of the same period. What is the connection? J.W.. Melbourne, Fla.

Answer: There is still much work to be done on the relationship between Columbia and various off-brands of phonographs. Both Busy Bee cylinder and disc machines were constructed of Columbia parts as well as United, Standard, Talk-o-phone, Aretino, Oxford, and others. The general pattern seemed to be that all required their own special records. For example, the Busy Bee cylinder was too wide to fit onto an Edison or Columbia mandrel. The other disc machines had various size spondle holes, running from about ½" to 3", which pretty much guaranteed that nothing else could be played on them. As Columbia went through their numerous model changes, surplus parts were apparently sold to distributor-type companies who merely assembled rather than manufactured the machines. An interesting collection could be made of each of these.

NOSTALGIA FAIRS AND RE-GROUND PIVOTS

As announced last month, APM attended the Yesteryear Nostalgia Fair on November 3rd and 4th, and we are glad to report that collectors found the affair enjoyable from at least two points of view: new acquisitions in phonographs and records, and meeting some friends who had previously been known only through the mails. To top it off, Don Donahue's Buffalo Disaster Jazz Band provided some really excellent musical entertainment.

Yesteryear's next antique show will be held on Sunday, December 9th, 1973. This time, exhibit space will be furnished by the new Holiday Inn in Livingston, New Jersey, on Route 10, just west of the Eisenhower Parkway Traffic Circle. Hours will be from 10 am to 6 pm.

Incidentally, it was at the last Fair that we met a young collector named Glenn Grabinsky. Glenn is gradually mastering the machinist's art and mentioned an interesting repair that can be made to improve the quality of Edison cylinder phonographs.

Many of the earlier Edison models had conical end-pivots which supported the mandrel and feed screw. These would wear before the parts they supported. Depending on the amount of wear, some uneven rotating and distortion may occur. A stop-gap method to correct this would involve turning the pivot in its holder so that the worn spot is on the side or bottom. If this cannot be done, regrinding on a lathe is necessary and Glenn has informed APM that he is willing to re-machine these pivots for interested collectors for only $1.00 each plus postage. Our thanks to Glenn for providing this service! Pivots may be sent to him at 364 Upland Road, Mountindale, New Jersey 07092.

If others can supply parts and services, why not let us know? We will be glad to act as a "clearing - house" for information of this sort. +++

LISTENING TO PAINT?

The early experiments conducted by Thomas Edison in Menlo Park and the Volta Laboratory in Washington, D. C. revealed that sound could be "imbedded" in many different kinds of materials, including copper, tin, iron, wax, chalk, paper, etc. Edison's fascination with tinfoil has never been clearly explained but the infinite variety of materials has intrigued others who played no role in the phonograph's development.

It was reported in the April 28, 1973 issue of Saturday Review Magazine that Dr. Richard Woodbridge of Princeton Junction, New Jersey, believed that sound had been inadvertently captured in various materials before the invention of commercial recording. Dr. Woodbridge thought sound recordings could be found in ceramic objects and old paintings. Arthur C. Clarke, the science-fiction writer, considered this possibility in a talk at the Smithsonian Institution earlier this year and APM recalls a TV dramatization from the late 50's on a program called Science Fiction Theatre. The chance that this will actually happen seems rather remote, but the possibilities are endless: instead of going to the trouble of planting microphones in political headquarters, just send in the painters - nobody will suspect a thing! Or how about an opportunity to hear Nipper, the Victor dog, bark? Just run a needle over Barraud's painting. Who knows? Someday...

PRODUCTION FIGURES FOR EDISON CYLINDER RECORDS

In the March 1973 issue of APM, we published production figures for Edison phonographs between 1896 and 1904. These revealed that annual sales of machines had levelled off at just over 40,000 from 1899 to 1902. With the introduction of molded mass-produced cylinders, sales of phonographs shot up radically, indicating that the improved sound and durability of the records increased the market. Now, sales figures of Edison's cylinders for the same period reflect a similar, if more drastic, rise. Notice the levelling off of brown-wax records to about 2,000,000 annually from 1899 to 1902. Although we do not know the precise date of Edison's release of gold-moulded cylinders, we believe they were first sold in January of 1902. Dr. Petersen of San Mateo, California and an editorial contributor to APM, now believes moulded language cylinders appeared in late 1901.

At any rate, there were literally millions of Edison cylinders made, but one must sadly conclude that most have perished and without the efforts of collectors, none would have been preserved. As we see it, most of the work involved in rescuing these records and machines has been done, not by institutions, (with some notable exceptions), but by collectors who persisted when everyone else thought they were crazy. We are indebted to them! We just hope that some more Museums Libraries and Universities wake up to the wealth of information that has been collected before it is too late.

BOOK REVIEW

The Oxford Dictionary of the English Language gives 1901 for the first printed literary reference to Ragtime, but the rags first popularized by Tom Turpin date back to 1897. Taking this date as his cue, David Jasen has just written a useful new book entitled Recorded Ragtime, 1897-1958, and it provides a fascinating cross-section of American popular music.

Judged against its stated goal of listing all disc ragtime recordings, the book is very well researched. Random checks among collectors' records found virtually all titles included. This search was simplified by Jasen's listing all original composer credits in full to distinguish between similar or identical titles. As a result, there is no confusion between the ragtime Bugle Call Rag, and the later Jazz number of the same name.

The book is prefaced by a short introduction on the genesis and evolution of ragtime as it emerged from Sedalia, Missouri. This is followed by an alphabetical list of the ragtime selections, accompanied by recording or release dates, as well as record manufacturers. There are all kinds of interesting details, such as the title with the most recorded versions (Twelfth Street Rag, written in 1930). The composers are also given a separate index of their own, many with birth and death dates, with a chronological listing of their compositions. This is followed by a few pictures and a general index to the whole book.

Although the title itself does not specify, Jasen says in his introduction that he has considered only disc recordings. This is a shame as there is now enough available material to have included cylinders, especially since the cylinder record was more popular in the 1890's. This would have changed his title, since by his own definition, Rastus on Parade is considered Ragtime, and was composed in 1895 and recorded by Columbia as early as August 1896. It is discouraging to see 1913 given for the first disc recording of this selection. By 1898, Edison also had cylinder recordings of Ragtime.

Among the few omissions would be two versions of Whistling Rufus: Vess L. Ossman on Zonophone 9180 and Troise and his Bandoliers on London 205. And of course, there is always the technical problem of one's definition of Ragtime. Why isn't Fred Van Eps' recording of Rag Pickings on Victor 16934 included? Some missing Edison recording dates could easily have been obtained from researcher Ray Wile. Also, no medleys seem to be included. For example, Victor 4807 of The Flying Arrow Medley is not listed, although the song is.

However, these are minor matters when compared with the overall success of the book. It is extremely well laid-out, hard-bound and neatly printed with easy-to-read type (no squinting here!), and it does cover the field in depth in its 155 pages. For the subject of recorded disc Ragtime, it can be considered definitive, and true discographers can fill in the blanks. If you enjoy Ragtime and want to learn more about its origins and growth, Jasen's book is a must. It may be obtained at your local bookstore or ordered from the publisher for $8.50. The address is Archon Books, 995 Sherman Avenue, Hamden, Conn. 06514.

A Date to Remember: The first phonograph was built between December 4th and 6th, 1877
